BANTU NOTES AND VOCABULARIES.

No. II.

Comparative Tables and Vocabularies of Lange, Songe, Mbangala, Kioko, Lunda, etc.

COLLECTED BY W. R. SUMMERS, M.D. EDITED BY HELI CHATELAIN.

Note.—The geographical location of the languages and dialects contained in this number has already been given in No. I.

The orthography of Dr. Summers has been preserved in the tables (y = i, w = u, sh = x); in the vocabularies that of Chatelain has been substituted for it.

The names of the languages are not uniform in this No. II. Lange equals Kixi-lange or Mwaku-Bashi-lange; Songe equals Busonge; Kioko equals Kiokwe, Ki-bokwe or Chi-bokwe; Beneki is the name of the tribe; Lunda equals Runda or U-runda; Mbangala equals U-mbangala; Pende equals U-pende, and Shinshi equals Shinji or Xinji.

The differences are due to the variation or absence of the prefix denoting language. So long as the correct, local or tribal, prefix remains unsettled, as in these imperfectly studied languages, it seems preferable to drop the prefix generally; but in order to ascertain which is to be the permanent form and for comparative purposes, it is important to record the various prefixes used by collectors of linguistic material in the Bantu field.
